"THEY TAUNT YOU WITH BEING UNION-SAVERS," said Mr. Choate in his speech at Lowell three years ago. His reply to the Sneerswells then, is in session now. "I never thought that a sarcasm of the first magnitude," said he, "but as men but do their best, let it go for what they think it worth, I take for granted, fellow-citizens, that you, that all of us, despise cant and hypocrisy in all things; the feigning a lear not felt, the cry of peril not believed to exist, all meanress and all wickedness of falsehood in our dealings with the mind of the people. But I take it for granted, too, that we are above the cowardice and immorality of suppressing our sense of a danger, threatening precious interests and possible to be arrested from the dread of jokes; and that we are above the folly of yielding that vast advantage which deep convictions give to earnest men in the dissensions of the Republic .-Think what a thing it were to win the proud and sounding name in reality which they bestow in derision! Suppose, only suppose it so for the argument, that there is danger -over-estimated, perhaps, by the solicitude of filial love-but real or probable and less or more remote-suppose, merely for the supposition, that Washington had reason to leave that warning against this kind of geographical combinations, under all pretexts, and that this one comes within the spirit and the terms of warning-suppose it to be so that we are right, that vehement passions, eager philanthropy, moral emotions not patient nor comprehensive of the indispensable limitations of political duty, that anger, pride, ambition, the lust of sectional power, the jealousy of sectional aggression, the pursuit even of ends just and desirable by means disproportioned and needless and exasperating-the excess and outbreak of virtues by which, more surely than by vices, a country may be undone-that these, all working in an unsual conjecture of affairs and state of public temper, have exposed, and are exposing this Union to danger less or more remote: and then suppose that by the same word seasonably uttered, some vote openly and courageously given, some sincere conviction plainly expressed, we could do something to earn the reality of the praise which they give us in jest; something for the safety, something for the peace of this holy and beautiful house of our fathers, something were it ever so little-would not this be compensation for the laughter of fools; ave, for alienated friendships, averted faces, and the serpent tooth of slander—a thing worth dying for, and even worth living for." MANAGING WINDOWS FOR AIR .- There is always a draught through key-holes and window crevices, because, as the external air is colder than the air in the room we occupy, it rushes through the window crevices to supply the deficiency caused by the escape of warm air up the chimney. If you open the lower sash of a window, there is always more draught than if you open the upper sash. The reason of this is because, if the lower sash be open, cold air will rush into the room and cause a great draught inward; but if the upper sash be open, the heated air of the room will rush out, and of course there will be less draught inward. A room is best ventilated by opening the upper sash, because the hot vitiated air which always ascends towards the ceiling, can escape more easily. The wind dries damp linen because dry wind, like a sponge, imbibes the particles of vapor from the surface of the linen as fast as they are formed. The hottest place in a church or chapel is the gallery, because the heated air of the building ascends, and all the cold air which can enter through the doors and windows, keeps on the floor till it becomes heated. Special attention should be given to the ventilation of sleeping rooms; for pure air, and abundance of it, is, if possible, more necessary when we are asleep than when we are awake. Sleeping rooms should be large, high and airy, more especially in warm latitades, and in situations where the windows have to be kept closed at night on account or

SENATOR CRITTENDEN .- Another of the ancient lights of the United States Senate is soon to go out. By the election of Mr. Breckinridge from Kentucky, John J. Crittenden, the oldest member of the Senatorial body, retires from a public service that has been most honorable to himself, and most useful to the country. Mr. Crittenden is now in the 74th year of his age. He entered the Senate as early as 1817-fortytwo years ago-although he then served but two years. It is a singular fact that Mr. Crittenden has never been a member of the House of Representatives. Besides his different terms in the Senate, Mr. Crittenden served the public as Governor of Kentucky, and Attorney-General under President Harrison, and also under Mr. Fillmore. He was always faithful to his post, and animated by enlarged and patriotic ideas. His eloquence in debate will long be remembered. With his retirement in 1861, will disappear the landmarks in the Senate of the old Southern Whigs. John Bell, a worthy compeer, has preceded him the present year. Mr. Crittenden's successor, Mr. Breckinridge, is a man of superior ability and character.
